1. What stood out to you most about Jesus' silence and restraint during His suffering?
(What does it reveal about His character and purpose?)
2. Where do you see yourself most in this story: Pilate, the crowd, or Jesus? Why?
(What emotions or motivations do you relate to?)
3. What does this passage teach us about the difference between political power and true authority?
(How does Jesus redefine what power looks like?)
4. Pilate knew Jesus was innocent, yet still handed Him over. Where are you tempted to compromise what you know is right in order to keep comfort, approval, or control?
(What would courage and obedience look like in that area?)
5. Jesus is mocked as "King of the Jews," yet John is clearly showing us that He truly is King. What kind of King is Jesus in this passage, and how is His kingship different from what the world expects? How should that reshape the way we view power, leadership, and surrender?)
6. If Jesus truly is King, what area of your life are you still holding onto as if you are in charge (your plans, relationships, finances, habits, fears, image, control)?
What would it look like this week to bring that area under His kingship in a practical way?
